

WEATHER ALERT

Snow Update... After widespread moderate to heavy snow a little while ago, a drier pocket slowly moving in from Connecticut has resulted a lull. And it's quite possible that treated surfaces hold fairly well for the next hour or two, especially closer to Connecticut and the Sound Shore. Going forward, it looks like the coverage and intensity of the snow should build again during the evening, resulting in a good 1 - 3" of new accumulation...perhaps locally more in a few spots if bands can linger. In addition to snow accumulations, any wet & slushy areas probably refreeze tonight...and some gusty winds develop which can lead to a few pockets of blowing snow tonight into early Tuesday.
